In the meantime, see attached for the updated ordinance. It combines what we discussed internally, what Daniel submitted, and what we discussed today. I also had a few more comments and placeholders for things that need to be finalized based on today's conversation. I have not had a chance to talk to Kevin yet.

Will do. I just don't want a repeat of 375 Terhune where we expected one thing then the application looked like another thing and by then it was too late to do much about it.

I don't see two front doors here and can't see why it would be needed. I remember them mentioning a porch — which we said was important to maintain the residential streetscape feel. Looks like dead space but hard to tell. Why don't you write to Daniel directly and ask for clarification?

Hi Justin,

When they showed us the massing of the street frontage facing Spruce at the meeting on Friday, this structure definitely has a pitched roof. Thus I think the first possibility you mention (dead attic space under the eaves) is definitely the explanation. Two front doors is not so bad given that there are a lot of duplexes in this neighborhood, but I take your point. We should ask to see more than massing next time, with at least openings shown, so we can consider the question properly.

David and Derek,

Do you have an understanding of what is proposed in the new building fronting Spruce Street in the attached drawing, particularly on the third floor? Do you read the white space as dead space in a pitched roof or is it more of a penthouse-like cube in the center of that roof with a stair tower leading to it?

I know the initial thought was that this building would be a single-family home like the others on the street - or at least look like one - but it is looking less and less like that (two front doors, no porch, the overhang, the third floor, the inevitable architecture).

Best,
Justin

Justin,

Attached are some materials for review, in anticipation of our meeting on Wednesday. I'm working with Chris Tarr to send you over marked-up zoning language. I will forward it over as soon as it's ready. Thanks, and have a great weekend.
